The Denis Wick Large Bore Trombone begins with a mouthpiece considered to be the best of the London Euphonium trombone and is played by the world's finest of the Royal College of Music. The original design from the 1940s has remained constant, but the improvements in the cup, rim and throat in which it is made in the updated version. There is a characteristic clarity, warmth and depth of sound which in other makes has been able to match. Innovation and flexibility have been brought to a state of perfection which has helped to create the higher standard of trombone playing seen at all areas of activity.
